THREAT OF FLOODS AS STORM SWEEPS TO ST. LAWRENCE

Leaves Death and Destruction
In Its Wake; Towns
Isolated

45 ARE KNOWN DEAD

Storm Centered During Night
in Lake Ontario Region;
Stiff Wind

NEW YORK, Aug. 25.—(INS).—Threat of devastating floods confronted the eastern seaboard today as the storm which pounded coastal regions from Connecticut to the Carolinas for the past five days swept toward the St. Lawrence Valley, leaving in its wake a welter of death and destruction.

Isolation of seaboard and inland towns in several states still prevented a complete casualty check-up this morning, but at least 45 were known dead. Virginia counted 10 casualties, Maryland 11, Pennsylvania a dozen, there were eight dead in New Jersey and at least four in New York State.

Flood threats came as torrential rains deluged Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York while the storm swung over those states, centering last night in the Lake Ontario region. A 50-mile-an-hour wind howled across the Lake sector and storm warnings which still dotted the Atlantic Coast were broken out along the Great Lakes.

Streams throughout the three states which felt the waning blows of the storm were over their banks or rising rapidly. Throughout southern New Jersey and the adjacent Pennsylvania region, residents feared a repetition of the great freshet of 1903 and flood waters spread over the countryside, inundating highways, tearing out bridges and culverts and halting rail and motor transport.

Both the Delaware and Cooper rivers overflowed, flooding the Camden waterfront. In Pennsylvania the Schuylkill and Lehigh rivers were at flood, with tributaries pouring in fresh torrents hourly.

Streams throughout New Jersey and Delaware were rising rapidly and in many localities had already burst their banks. Near Dover, N. J., marines from Pocomtunc Arsenal and civilians worked all day yesterday and throughout the night strengthening the dam at Denmark Lake.

The Maurice River near Millville overflowed and flooded the water-works, and at Gloucester the Newton Creek backed up and put the water-works out of service.

Scores of streams in Pennsylvania rose over their banks and health officials issued warnings of water pollution and advised residents to boil drinking water.

Along the coast every state reported numerous property damage and ruined crops. Much of the Maryland Eastern Shore region was still isolated and several communities were reported in HARRISBURG, Aug. 25.—Allocations of $600,000 in Federal funds to 61 counties to be used on highway relief projects were authorized by the State Emergency Relief Board today. It also granted 10 counties additional money to finance August relief work.

Governor Pinchot instructed the members of the board in a formal letter today that he would not accept David Williams, Allentown, as a director of Lehigh County Relief Board. Allocations to Bucks County totaled $15,476; and to Montgomery County, $15,640.

Tell Us Another

(By the Stroller)

A member of Bucks County 8 'n' 40 Society, eagerly looking forward to the state meeting and dinner of that organization in Philadelphia scheduled for Wednesday, as well as American Legion Auxiliary sessions that are following, hit upon a unique way of lengthening her vacation from home duties, all the while pretending it was all a mistake.

The young woman in question emphatically claims she ordered her ticket, made arrangements for care of the children, and made the trip to Philadelphia with the idea in mind the 8 'n' 40 activities were to be Tuesday.

In a drenching rain she made the trip, gaily dressed in her red, white and blue uniform; nonchalantly walked into the lobby of the Benjamin Franklin Hotel, up to the mezzanine, and wondered at the lifted eye-brows of women at the registrar's desk. Not noticing any other "red-caps," the Bucks Countian in a now rather weak voice asked, "Will you kindly set me right? Are the 8 'n' 40 affairs today?"

"No; tomorrow," came the answer, and the red cap, now shrunk considerably in size, hurried for the nearest "down" elevator.

WARNS ABOUT WATER

HARRISBURG, Aug. 25.—A warning from Secretary of Health Theodore B. Appel today reached the inundated section of Pennsylvania advising all inhabitants to be cautious in the use of drinking water. He urged that water be boiled if there is any uncertainty regarding the supply. "Recent heavy rains have washed filth and polluted matter into streams," Appel said. Wells and springs have been flooded and some public water works have been inundated and forced to suspend operations.

RED CROSS HELPS HOMELESS

Wilmington, Del., Aug. 25.—Their automobiles loaded down with food and distilled water, Red Cross workers left here today for the stricken town of Laurel where 200 families are homeless. Situated directly in the path of the lashing hurricane that swept the coast, Laurel has been cut off from communication for two days. Telephone and telegraph wires were washed away. Half the town is under water and roads are impassable. Latest reports coming from the stricken area indicate the water supply has been polluted and food supplies are running low with many of the aged residents suffering. After proceeding as far as possible by automobile, the Red Cross workers will attempt to get through to the stricken town in row-boats.

FIGHT SLEEPING SICKNESS

St. Louis, Aug. 25.—Every reserve of the scientific world was being marshalled here today to combat further spread of the sleeping sickness epidemic which has claimed 25 lives. As men of medicine and famous scientific physicians, exhausted from lack of sleep and long hours of squinting through high-powered microscopes, sought desperately to isolate the deadly germ and to determine the carrying agency, three more fatalities were reported and it was announced the number of cases in this area had increased to 212. The outbreak of the disease in St. Louis was said by scientists today to be the worst concentration of sleeping sickness in the world.

SOLUTION OF TROUBLES IN COAL FIELD SEEN

Bituminous Industry Strife
May Soon Be Settled

AIM AT COMMON GOAL

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 25.—A peaceful solution of the many problems besetting the strife-torn bituminous coal industry appeared nearer today than at any time since efforts began to bring coal under the National Recovery Act.

The adoption of a code of fair competition was far from assured but operators and union labor leaders were driving toward a common goal with a considerable show of friendliness.

Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson was dividing his time between the coal and automobile code problems as he sought to bring both to a conclusion during the week.

While the code question involves many problems the prospective effort to unionize the automobile industry appeared to be the real bar to a quick agreement upon an automobile code.

ANOTHER MILK PRICE RISE IS POSSIBILITY

Looms Today As Profits of Large Dairy Companies
Are Probed

NAME ADMINISTRATOR

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 25.—(INS).—Another milk price rise in addition to the one-cent-a-bottle increase that became effective in the Philadelphia district today loomed as a possibility as Federal investigators began a probe of profits of large dairy companies.

Dr. Clyde L. King, Federal marketing administrator, who returned to his home at Westtown last night, said an order increase might be necessary because of failure of attempts to force the distributors to pay farmers a greater basic return.

Charles F. Preston, a member of the board of directors of the Interstate Milk Producers Association was named administrator of the new marketing agreement for this region by Dr. King.

Meanwhile, Maj. Gen. Smedley D. Butler, retired marine commandant, at a meeting of 300 farmers in Concordville, Delaware county, urged them to organize and battle the milk trust, which he termed a "racket."

"These outfits have been taking the farmers and consumers for a ride," General Butler declared. "It's time you got together and swept them all out."

Edward Miller, of Brandywine Summit, chairman of the meeting, said: "If we have to have a milk strike to get justice, we'll have it, even if it is a bloody one, though I hope it will not be."

Dr. King said if dealers are to be forced to accept a smaller proportion of the return they now receive from the sale of milk the provisions of the NRA will be defeated.

"I can reduce the spread between what the farmers get and what the dealers get from the retail milk price but only at the risk of forcing many small distributors into bankruptcy and making large dealers discharge some of their employees," Dr. King said.

Dr. Charles Reiffel, former University professor of Pittsburgh and now an accountant in the Department of Agriculture, is supervising the examination of dealers' records here to determine their returns.

Preston, a Nottingham township, Chester county farmer, announced his selection as administrator in advance of any formal notification from Washington. He is a Penn State College graduate and a director and organizer of the Interstate. Preston said he will resign as a director as soon as his credentials arrive.

Farm School Herd
Makes National Record

During the month of June, the 11 Ayrshires owned by the National Farm School at Farm School, Pennsylvania, made the second highest production record in the United States for the month of June, producing an average of 1081 pounds of 3.95% milk, and 43.14 pounds of butterfat, according to Advanced Registry Superintendent, W. A. Kyle, of the National Ayrshire Breeders' Association at Brandon, Vermont.

The cows were tested under the rules of the Ayrshire Herd Test, which require that every animal be included in the average, regardless of whether or not she is in milk at the time the test is conducted.

Sycamore Redbird, a five-year-old, was the highest producing cow in the herd, with 1494 pounds of milk and 69.77 pounds of butterfat to her credit for the month.

Fourth Member, Lerro Family, Gang Victim Within 3 Months

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 25.—(INS).—For the fourth time within three months a member of the Lerro family lay dead today, a victim of gangland's sub-machine gun vengeance.

The target for the mobsters' latest firing was John Lerro, 29, an alleged number writer and brother-in-law of two other number writers slain by gangster bullets on a street here last March.

Lerro was killed by a rain of bullets fired from a speeding car last night as he sat on the doorstep of his home in South Philadelphia, a direct target for the gunmen. Doctors said death was caused by bullets that ripped through his chest and lungs.

Shortly after the slaying of Lerro's brother-in-law, John and Joseph Mazzaro, 18 and 22 respectively, gunmen, killed his uncle, Andrew Schiavo.

Police have rounded up a dozen persons, including two women, for questioning but refuse to reveal what part any of the suspects played in the murders.

FLOOD WATERS RECEDE LEAVING MUCH DAMAGE

Newport Terrace Residents
Move Back Into Houses

RIVER VERY DIRTY

With the fury of the three-day Nor'easter past, residents along the Delaware River, Neshaminy Creek and other streams in this section yesterday turned their attention to the removing of debris, reclamation of lost goods, and general process of cleaning up.

A large number of families at Newport Terrace, Fergusonsville and Maple Beach, forced to evacuate in the early hours of yesterday morning, have returned to their homes, eager to rid the premises of mud and what water remains, and again become comfortably established.

Some row-boats, canoes and motorcraft, which broke loose from their moorings along the Delaware and Neshaminy, have been taken in tow further down-stream, and in some instances owners have been successful in their search, and reclaimed their goods.

Floresam was left all along the banks of the receding streams, but at many points lumber and fire-wood of value have been taken from the waters to be made use of by the claimers.

The waters of the Neshaminy lowered with rapidity yesterday afternoon, and roads at Hulmeville and Newportville once more became passable.

Residents of Maple Beach as well as those in the low-lands along the Neshaminy Creek are turning their attention to basements, in some instances water a few feet deep remaining.

It is stated that some time will be required to eliminate the water in Maple Beach, as the bank over which the flood rushed from the Delaware will prevent the waters from running out to the river. This means that the small stream through the beach and evaporation will have to be depended upon.

Water in the Delaware river this morning at high tide was three inches higher than it was last night at high tide here at Bristol. The flood waters have receded and went out yesterday afternoon with the changing winds. Mill street wharves are still inundated. Lowlands at Newport Terrace and Fergusonsville are again free of water. The river road at Maple Beach is blocked to traffic. The approach to the Bristol-Burlington bridge is still covered with water but machines are driving through slowly on the right of the roadway.

The water in the river is jet black, coming down from the Lehigh section. The crew of men at the pumping station and filtration plant of the Bristol water works is keeping a close watch on conditions. It is necessary to use almost twice the quantity of alum, so as to clear the water for domestic use.

Debris has started to come down-stream. At six o'clock this morning a cabin cruiser owned by John Kelly, Trenton, N. J., was caught drifting down the river opposite the Bristol waterworks. The boat was headed for the Burlington Island wharf where it probably would have smashed up had it not been for Clarence W. Winter. Mr. Winter was aboard his boat and caught the floating yacht. The boat named "Ginger" was made fast here and Mr. Kelly notified. Two trees were fast to the yacht's moorings.

"Ber" Nichols, Wood street, was pulled from the river last night by John Buss. The Nichols youngster was playing near the Mill street wharf and in attempting to grab a stick fell overboard.

An Italian child fell into Adams Hollow Creek early last evening near Pond street. The child was rescued and taken home.

Boys on bicycles are having a fine time riding through the inundated sections at Maple Beach.

The Flood of 1903

In a book at the pumping station of the Bristol Water Works there are recorded some facts concerning the flood waters which prevailed here for three days, October 9th, 10th and 11th, 1903.

"The whole engine room at the water works was under water," says the record. There were two feet of water in the engine room and the highest tide at that time was on Sunday evening, October 11th.

The pumps were then operated by steam and the water was so high in the engine room that one of the fires was put out. The late Anthony K. Joyce, who was then in charge, saw the water rising and quickly changed boilers and by his quick action prevented the town from being without water supply. The water was within five inches of putting out the second boiler.

The equipment now is much improved. There are three ways of operating the pumps—steam, electricity and gasoline. The gasoline pumps are so located that perhaps they would be the last to be disabled.

MAN NOT MERE MACHINE

A hopeful prospect for the coming generation is that it may not have to hear the exhortation, "Eat it; it's good for you." In the name of health education, dietetic faddists during the past decade have outlawed pretty nearly every food that our forebears favored, and have kept the conscientious constantly worried over the problem of opposing proper nourishment to the "sinful appetites of the flesh." And now, hopefully, the tide seems to be turning and common sense is coming to the rescue of the dietetically oppressed.

Recently one of the foremost medical authorities of the world told the British Medical Association that the "scientific truth about all this diet business is to eat moderately, taking ordinary mixed diet and don't worry about anything."

At Colgate University the coming semester research is to be directed toward finding if there may not be direct benefit from eating, not what may be academically determined to be good for one, but according to the individual's natural taste. Dr. Donald A. Laird, of the department of psychology in that institution, will have charge and in the advance statement of his course says:

"There has been a tendency in diet work for the past decade to treat man as a purely chemical machine working on calories, vitamins, minerals, carbohydrates, etc. Taste, odor, and appearance of food have been largely neglected, and it is these which will occupy our attention. Authorities recognize that the process of digestion is directly influenced by the psychological factors as well as by the chemical constituents of the food eaten, and the eater's whole temperament may be affected by good or bad digestion."

OYSTERS

September has ever been a popular month with a large class of persons for the reason that as the first "R" month after summer it ushers in a new oyster season. If a perfectly normal person doesn't appreciate summer 10 chances to one he or she is an oyster hound.

There have been eccentrics whose idea of truly heroic pioneering was the first oyster dinner and who spoke derisively and contemptuously of the bivalve, but none will deny its high place in polite society this year. The ability to send 20,000 men back to work on September 1st deserves not only recognition but respect.

Every strong personality has both loyal friends and dangerous enemies, which makes the oyster a strong personality. A pious circuit rider believed he had attained the acme of calumny when he called the New Englanders "imps who eat oysters." And there was that famous comparison by former Senator James A. Reed of his political enemies with the silent oyster.

But friends, has the oyster far in excess of its detractor. Oyster suppers have paid off many a church mortgage and brought gastronomical satisfaction to millions of epicures. And of course those who make their living directly or indirectly from this most famous member of the mollusk family swear by it.

Welcome, September, doubly welcome, with your oysters stewed, on the half shell, steamed, fried, scalloped or in turkey filling!

CHAPTER THIRTY-THREE

Mulrooney finished his call to headquarters. His words had been imperative. Every policeman and detective in the city was commanded to be on the look-out for Lucky Cavanaugh. His description was broadcast over the police radio to every patrolling car.

Wanted on suspicion of murder, the call was to bring Lucky Cavanaugh in dead or alive.

With his hat pulled tightly down on his head, Mulrooney left the house. From her bedroom window upstairs, Leni saw him leave. He looked a great deal like a maddened bull ready to charge the first object that crossed his path.

Lucky had asked Leni not to worry. Well—that was perfectly sound advice. What had worry ever accomplished for anybody?

There was nothing sensible to do except to keep calm and keep her heart up. The years to come could not possibly be as hard as those behind her. No sooner had one danger been over than a new one had taken its place. It had been like those hurdle races where finally they run smoothly to the finish on a level stretch. Life, very probably, was like that—near the finish.

Only one danger remained. Only one danger and one desire! It was possible for a malicious destiny to rob her of Lucky Cavanaugh.

She sat down at her dressing table, rested her elbows upon it and cupped her face in her two warm palms. What a strange life I've led, she thought, looking into the glass. There is no one else on earth like me. I have been at the bottom and at the top. It's queer about life. Now—right now—it's ending or beginning. I don't know which.

A sound in the room startled her. The movement of a door. Leni stopped breathing. Something, suddenly, was going to happen. . . .

Leni closed her eyes for a minute.

Then she opened them and looked into the mirror that was so close to her face. Over her shoulder on the far side of the room a closet door was slowly opening. It opened wide and out of the shadowy recess beyond stepped the familiar figure of Lucky Cavanaugh.

"The safest place I could find in the city," he said with a smile. "I was conscious only of a tingling delight."

"All in a life time," Lucky said in the unruffled manner she loved. "Are you glad to see me?"

Leni rose without taking her eyes off him, and went into his arms.

"Am I glad to see you? My darling!" she took a deep breath.

"Darling, darling, darling!"

Her sensation that life was a dream continued. Events like this would not really happen to people in their waking hours. Yet Cavanaugh's arms around her were substantial and his lips upon her own were warm with the thrill that no dream could ever equal.

At last they drew back from their kiss.

"Why? How?"

"It's very simple," said Cavanaugh, smiling as though she were a child. "It would have done no good to cut and run. So I merely walked up the stairs and came in here. How did Mulrooney feel when he woke up?"

Leni was astonished at how casually they were able to talk. It amused her.

"I think every tooth in his head was aching," she laughed. "Poor Mulrooney! I felt sorry for him."

Her good-nature was infectious. For the first time, to the surprise of them both, the tumult of their mutual attraction died down and left them at ease. They could talk like pals—like friends—like husband and wife. They were talking of somebody else—not of themselves.

"Am I glad to see you? My darling!" she took a deep breath.

"Darling, darling, darling!"

"I'm not worrying about Mulrooney—he won't even have a headache by dinner time," said Cavanaugh lightly. "I had to get away from him the best way I could. But don't let it worry you, sweetheart."

They stood apart now, each marveling at the other's poise—the living current of sheer life surging through them, trampling under all obstacles. In luck or out of luck, Cavanaugh realized that no other living woman could so fill him with physical and mental energy. With the tingle of Leni Lunska in his blood nothing was impossible to him. He could even forget the web of menace that now entangled his very existence.

"Do you know, sweetheart, you give me new ideas," he told her, studying her slender, elastic figure. "I know it sounds sappy—but you make me feel like I could go out and conquer the world. I want to do something I've never done before. You don't suppose I'm going to wind up earning an honest living, do you?"

It was a preposterous mood. How could two people forget the tragedies that had overtaken them and find the giddiness of a celestial champagne bubbling around their hearts?

Both of them were, ordinarily, individuals of more than average sensitivities. No one had ever accused either of being callous, yet each, so very recently, had been brushed by the black wings of death.

The only explanation, perhaps, is that love is a principle akin to light which banishes darkness.

This much is certain—for a brief while, Cavanaugh and Leni Lunska were unaware of the disaster and tragedy that swirled in their external world. In Leni's bedroom with the windows open and the curtains gently moving in the breeze, with the sun shining and the flowers growing in the garden beneath, they lost completely their remembrance of human sin. . . .

This the cynical may not believe—that they rested upon the bed side by side, hand in hand, telling each other how much they had to live for. They were both fatigued, and relaxed in nerves, half drowsy.

"We have already survived so much together that I don't believe even an earthquake could separate us now," Leni said.

"Never!" was the emphatic reply.

"Unless people are in love," Leni went on, "they live in a world where everything hurts. You eat and sleep and work and it's just like wasting your time. Have you ever looked at the tired, unhappy faces in a crowd, Lucky? All those people on the streets—how many of them have found love? It's all so empty and silly and joyless—like playing a piano without strings. I wonder if everybody eventually finds love—or are we the only two on earth?"

Cavanaugh had been wondering about the same thing.

A new door to life had opened for him. He rested beside Leni Lunska and talked of things that had never passed his lips before. The shell that was hard and wise and witty fell away from him, and he was no more than a very young and—miraculously—a very innocent boy.

"People like I used to be don't know there are such things as this in the world," he said dreamily. "I used to believe that women and love and marriage and all the rest of it was something that was either pretty cheap or, at best, a poetic myth. Either that or very much hot-hot, like getting drunk. Words like 'beautiful' and 'wonderful' and 'marvelous'—I thought anybody who talked that way was a sap."

Flood Waters Recede Leaving Much Damage

Much damage was done to the interior of the houses and the furnishings at Newport Terrace and Fergusonville. The interior wood-work is warped and mud covers the inside. All of the furnishings have been damaged and radios ruined. The damage done in this manner will amount to considerable.

Families began moving back into their houses yesterday afternoon when the water receded. Men, women and children today are endeavoring to set things to rights. Bedding, carpets and furniture are being placed out in the open to dry. The ground surrounding the houses is muddy and marsh-like.

Rising steadily at the rate of a foot an hour, the Delaware River at one o'clock this morning overflowed the 12-foot retaining wall at Stacy Park, Trenton, for the first time since 1924. Shortly past midnight the river had already eaten into wide areas along its banks from Washington Crossing down.

The rapid rise of the turbulent stream, swollen by the steady rain of the past week and by raging waters from its many tributaries, came as the aftermath of one of the most severe storms in this section in many years. An overflow on the Pennsylvania side above the Calhoun Street Bridge caused several families whose homes are not on high terraces along the Yardley River Road to flee.

Along the Yardley River Road from Calhoun street, Trenton, up toward Yardley the highway was flooded, with the water in sections standing two feet deep. The roadway was roped off by police. The shore line from Yardley to Washington Crossing on both sides of the river was reported as not being seriously affected.

Sellersville was a deep sea town, when the Branch creek went on the rampage.

Boys went swimming on Main street, where the water attained a depth of five feet in some places. The "bay" extended for a square in the business section.

Two turtles and an eel were caught inside the Lehigh Valley trolley station, where the water was eighteen inches deep. The loading platform at the depot was used as a diving board by the swimmers. An iron-bound wooden bench in front of the station started to float across Main street at one time during the evening. Several boys swam after it, and navigated it inside the building.

One family occupying a first floor apartment in the Stout building spent the evening in bathing suits, wading around in a foot of water or more. Howard Besch, the station agent, stuck to his post, and rescued his tickets and other papers just as the water level was reaching them. Besch took off his shoes and stockings and rolled up his trousers as far as they would go when he got ready to go home, but it was a futile gesture. He stepped out of the station into water waist deep.

The telephone company headquarters in Doylestown reported at least 150 telephones in Doylestown were out of commission and that in the district the total would reach 500. Telephone communication between Hattboro, Doylestown, Newtown and Philadelphia, was completely cut off.

Along the Old York Road near Buckingham a large tree fell over one of the principal telephone trunk lines, making it necessary to call out the State Highway wrecking crews as well as all the "trouble men" the telephone company has in its employ. The telephone damages will reach many thousands of dollars in Bucks county alone.

Many valuable trees in Doylestown Borough were badly damaged. A large maple tree on the lawn of the home of Mrs. John C. Swartz, East State street was snapped in two by the high wind.

A large water tank on the Clear Spring Worsted Mill, Doylestown, buckled under a load of 12,000 gallons of water and the high wind, and toppled over, causing a loss of approximately $4500. Had the tank fallen in the direction of the factory a new $4,000 roof would have been wrecked. It was necessary for Clear Spring Mill to connect with borough water today to continue operation of the plant. A new water tank will be erected immediately.

The Neshaminy Creek overflowed its banks near Newtown and flooded the Durham Road. Police ordered a three-mile detour through Bucktoe.

Bucks county's beautiful fruit orchards suffered a tremendous damage it was estimated this morning by Dean Goodling, of Farm School. The damage to the apple crop is about 10 per cent, it was estimated, due to late frost, but the damage to peaches and

LOWER BUCKS SERIES
WILL OPEN HERE TONIGHT

The first game of the Lower Bucks County championship series will take place on St. Ann's field tonight at six o'clock. The Hulmeville A. A. team, winner of the second half, will play the Hibernians, first half champions.

A large crowd is expected to be on hand because of the bitter feelings the clubs have for each other. Last season, Hulmeville won the first half and the Hibernians the second half, but no playoff was played, the teams failing to agree. Hulmeville blamed the Hibs for failing to agree, and the Hibs say that Hulmeville was the stubborn team and would not play.

So tonight will see the first game that will settle the differences between the teams and take out some of the intense rivalry the clubs have. Also, Hulmeville will be after revenge because the Hibs broke their twelve game winning streak last week.

Howard Black, most likely will be the pitching choice of the Hulmevillians. Black is in the midst of a winning streak, having copped seven straight. Five of these consecutive wins have been shut-out victories.

Opposing them, Hulmeville will have its old nemesis, "Eddie" Sullivan. Sullivan, the Hibs' southpaw twirler, has finally rounded into shape after a poor start and has been setting down his opponents in fine style.

"Bill" Mende will do the receiving for Hulmeville with Bruce on first, Leigh second, Rockhill short, and Comly third. The outfield will be Bilger, Watson, and Haefner.

The Hibs' backstopper will be "Fatty" Lyczak. Foster will be on first, Roe second, Thompson short, and Dougherty third. The outergarden will be composed of: Hines, McGinley and Dugan.

In order to get the full quota of nine innings, the first batter, Rockhill, will step to the plate exactly at six o'clock.

SEEK INSULL'S EXTRADITION

Athens, Greece, Aug. 25—The United States legation today filed a new demand for extradition of Samuel Insull, former Chicago utilities magnate, it was stated reliably in official quarters. Insull is wanted in the United States on charges of larceny and embezzlement in connection with the collapse of his middle-western power empire. While officials refused officially to confirm the news of the renewed demand, it was learned American officials are still anxious to extradite Insull and make him face his accusers.

Miss Frances Landreth, Radcliffe street, spent last week at Spring Lake, N. J.

ruins. Fruit crops from the section in nearby Delaware, South Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania were virtually wiped out and in many localities were said to be a total loss.

Hundreds were homeless in shore towns in Jersey, Delaware and Maryland. Many of these communities were still without lighting or communication facilities. All along the coast, linemen strove to restore telephone and telegraph communication in the stricken towns while utility companies rushed out augmented crews to repair power and light lines.

HARRISBURG, Aug. 25—Central Pennsylvania today was striving to recover from the ruins and wreckage caused by the ferocious rain and wind storm that left millions of dollars property damage in its wake. Swollen streams in the central division began to recede uncovering additional devastation. Highway crews were dispatched to various sections to make immediate repairs to washed out bridges and to remove debris washed onto the roads from mountain sides. Railroad travel returned to normalcy as receding waters permitted repairs to be made to destroyed road beds. In the anthracite region, where practically all collieries were forced to suspend operations on account of floods, workers began to march back to the mines.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 25—(INS)—With the storm abated but flood waters still continuing to swirl over lowlands, residents of Eastern Pennsylvania today plunged into the task of rebuilding the damage wrought by the northeaster which pounded the Atlantic seaboard as a climax to the four-day storm.

Loss was estimated at more than $2,000,000. Three of the twelve deaths reported in the storm section occurred in the Philadelphia district.

Damage of $500,000 was caused at the Philadelphia Airport when flood waters inundated the municipal field and hangars, flooded airplanes and destroyed photographic equipment and aviation supplies. Ten army planes were submerged to the wings.

Leaving Much Damage

pears will reach anywhere from 50 to 75 per cent.

At "Turkdon," the home of Oscar O. Bean, Doylestown township, an outdoor swimming pool was badly damaged when a section of the side wall was swept away by the high water. The swimming pool and nearby miniature golf course were both covered with water during the night.

Transportation throughout Bucks county, including bus, trolley and train, was badly crippled.

Thousands of motorists were stranded along the highways. Bridges in several parts of the county were washed out, dams burst and all told, the damage in Bucks county alone, including the loss of crops may reach close to $1,000,000, it is said.

Doylestown homes were in darkness for a time during the height of the storm when a high tension wire at Pine and State streets snapped, causing a deadly menace to the few people who passed by.

Raging streams and the Delaware River added to the havoc in Bucks county. Tohickon Creek at Point Pleasant was the highest in thirty-two years, although the Delaware River at the same village had risen but five feet during the day. The Tohickon was subsiding this morning, but residents along the river say they expect the Delaware to rise considerably.

Scores of campers along the banks of the Delaware River, the Tohickon and Nesaminy Creeks were forced to abandon their camps before 10 o'clock last night.

A score of students of National Farm School, together with members of the faculty, rescued a herd of 23 pure bred cattle marooned in a meadow a mile from the main campus of the school. The cattle were led safely back to the dairy barns with considerable difficulty as the students, in bathing suits and some in boots, waded through three and four feet of water.

The storm caused a short circuit to the burglar alarm equipment at the Doylestown National Bank, and four times the alarm sounded, causing considerable uneasiness until the trouble was discovered. When the safe automatically opened this morning it was possible to turn off the alarm when it sounded.
